INTERIOR COLOUR TRENDS

Our colour preferences change over time. The definition of the word preference itself means both whether we like yellow, red, blue or green or if the colour is light, dark, neutral or chromatic.

There are no new colours, all colours have always existed. The study of colour trends differs from the study of other trends. It is about understanding how our use of colour changes over time. It has got nothing to do with new colours on the market.

We often get to hear that colours of past decades are back in fashion. In fact, colour trends are a repetitive cycle of preferences. Furthermore, external factors also affect how these colour preferences move to certain areas of nuances and hues. Colour truly is psychology.

Our home is our castle. It is a place where we want to feel good. The colours we choose to surround ourselves with have an important part in our well-being. The colour trends of today are easy to embrace and to welcome into our homes.

The pink NCS S 1030-R10B, balanced by the accent dark blue NCS S 6030-R90B, is an important part of this mood. The pink is key to achieve the final mood of fresh sweetness and relief. It should thus be used on smaller surfaces in the room. The dark blue functions as a bridge between the hues, making sure you avoid that this trend becomes too cute. It creates a contrast which makes a beautiful and vivid room.

The deep and dark colours in this trend can both be used separately on walls or combined together to create an elegant and dynamic room. The colours are very similar in nuance which makes them easy to use together. In case you choose to use only one of the dark colours for your wall, try to have at least one more on details such as cushions. To further emphasize the mood of this trend, you need to have spots of light in the room. NCS S 1020-G50Y is a light green colour that creates a beautiful contrast to the darker shades.
